Dec 19, 2012 by Pawan Wadhwa AutoCAD, the following: The U.S. Government announced on March 1, 2013 that it has completed the Top Secret portion of the Trademark training program required by the National Security Agency (NSA) in 1992. As reported in previous articles here and in the JEPH and "What'sNewer" publications, the National Security Agency has been the center of controversy over former NSA contractor Edward Snowden's release in June of 2013 that the intelligence agency was spying on individuals all over the world. As news reports published in the NSA website, the agency confirmed that following completion of the Top Secret program, it had trained 139 individuals who "represent over 70 percent of the NSA's operations research, analysis and operations activities at Headquarters and at overseas facilities worldwide." According to the NSA, after each trainee had undergone the Top Secret course, they each had their training evaluated and received manager-made recommendations for further training. "The requirements for an individual undergoing Top Secret training must be assessed and certified to NSA's general manager, director, or director of a field office," the NSA site reported. "Sufficient evidence is required that the individual is of the highest caliber and fulfills the requirements of the Top Secret program. Individuals who have already met the requirements of a Top Secret training program are not eligible for a second Top Secret training."

Any solution? A: You can use the UIImage class to determine that: UIImage *img = [UIImage imageNamed:@"Icon.png"]; if ([img isKindOfClass:[UIImage class]]) { // Is PNG } else { // Is JPEG } But this might lead to problems on iOS 6 and older, as UIImage does not implement the isKindOfClass: method anymore. For backward compatibility, you will have to use the isEqualTo: method instead.
